Director's Statement

David Ives is known for his infamous plays about wacky characters that transform the stage into a world of comic bits. His new version of George Feydeau's play A Flea in Her Ear is no exception to his theatrical comic genius as actors tackle unusual subject matter that unveils the various cracks that can occur in the fragile relationships between men and women. I hope you enjoy A Flea in Her Ear as a production that compliments Mr. Ives' belief that actors deserve more credit than playwrights and the thought that, "I can sit comfortably in the back of the theatre, while they're up there risking everything."

Adapting Comedy for a New Era: Farce and Vaudeville in A Flea in Her Ear

By Katherine Dumas and Morgan Green, Dramaturgs

French playwright Georges Feydeau (1862-1921) penned over sixty works, gaining fame at the height of the Belle Époque era. Though not a serious social critic, he capitalized on satirizing every new fashion while continuing to exploit all the more traditional forms of that age's comedic characters – the female, the foreign, the old, the deformed, etc. His plots are improbable, usually dependent on far-fetched cases of mistaken identity, and worked out in great detail without any consequent loss of speed. His comedic style took farce to new heights on the French stage. Farce began in France in the 15th century, where the term was first used to describe the combination of clowning, acrobatics, caricature, and indecency into one form of entertainment. Feydeau's A Flea In Her Ear is considered a bedroom farce, which is heavy on indecency without ever giving too much away. Bedroom farces are centered on the sexual pairings and antics of characters as they move through improbable plots, and slamming doors. The comedy arises not from what we see on stage, but what we can only assume is taking place behind such doors.

David Ives (1950- ), a contemporary American playwright, screenwriter, and novelist, was perfect to translate Flea because of his reputation for writing comic one-act plays. Theatrical farce survived into the early 20th century and found new expression in vaudevillian films with Charlie Chaplin and the Marx Brothers. Both farce and vaudeville use easily identifiable "stock" characters, trickery, and physical comedy. By infusing Feydeau's farce with vaudevillian elements, Ives brings to light the nuances of the original script, and even, perhaps, reveals a bit more of what is behind those closed doors. Isn't that what we all want to know more than anything?

There will be two 10 minute intermissions

Dear Alumni, Parents and Friends:

On behalf of our faculty, staff and students, I want to thank you for joining us for today's performance. Your support allows us to provide excellent education opportunities for our students, and your presence here is a tangible reminder of the strength of the Chapman family.

In the College of Performing Arts we are passionately dedicated to providing the best possible education for our students in all of our disciplines. Musco Center for the Arts, to be inaugurated in the spring of 2016, is a sign of the University's commitment to ensure that the arts at Chapman will be second to none. Thanks to Musco Center, our students will continue to be given exceptional opportunities to learn from the best and to experience performance in a state-of-the-art facility. Marybelle and Paul Musco, as well as the many other donors who contributed to the project, are strongly dedicated to the educational mission of this exceptional facility and we hope you will return often to experience the performing arts in our new performance home.

Many other factors, however, help us maintain the highest educational standards to benefit our students directly. The Fund for Excellence, in particular, helps us make a huge difference in the experience of all our students throughout the year. Thanks to your support, the Fund has a direct impact on our programs by helping us pay for:

- Production costs for the 100-plus live performances of dance, music, theatre and opera the College produces each year;
- Recruitment of professional visiting artists for master classes and performances on campus;
- Scholarships and travel funds for our student touring ensembles and conferences.

Every single student in the College is touched directly by your generosity. What's more, the entire Chapman student body and members of our surrounding community benefit from the privileged access to these extraordinary productions every year. Your gift to the Fund has a ripple effect, touching so many lives through the gift of dance, theatre and music.

Please invest generously in the Fund for Excellence and in the College of Performing Arts, as I do, and your gift will be one of the most rewarding experiences you can have when you watch our young artists develop right before your eyes.

Our doors are always open for you, so join us again soon at one of our many performances and events this season!

Sincerely yours,

Giulio M. Ongaro, Dean
