NOTES ON THE PROGRAM

En Foret was written by Eugene Bozza as a test piece for graduate students at the renowned Paris Conservatory. It uses the horn's extensive range and coloristic capabilities and features virtuosic technical passages. In the middle section of the piece Bozza quotes a well-known hunting horn call.

In 1994 Brian Drake commissioned composer Maria Newman to create a new piece for solo French horn. Tonight is the premiere performance of Kestrel and Leonardo. It is a set of three songs for solo French horn which, though without words, still follow the text of Susan Musgrave's poems quite literally in respect to tone painting and form. The work exhibits the French horn in its many singing capacities, as well as virtuosic ones. Mr. Drake has recorded Kestrel and Leonardo for a compact disc of chamber works by Ms. Newman.

Kestrel and Leonardo, excerpted from poems by Susan Musgrave

I

Leonardo lives in the sky
He has a good view from there
Sometimes he takes tea and sandwiches to the cemetery.
His wings are big and bright also There are plenty of clouds in the sky and small stars that make the simple shapes of animals
Oh! the smiling fields Oh! the faces of angels
Leonard sleeps in the great bear's belly
It is warm and hairy in there and smells like a big department store
Leonardo dreams of mud slicks
He dreams of oil derricks
Leonardo dreams of banjo plinks
He dreams of hockey rinks
He dreams of an alarm clock with foot long tentacles
The great bear smacks his bear chops dreaming of Leonardo Leonardo between two slices of thick dry toast.
Leonardo served simply with salad
Er'ry night Leonardo lights the sky
The sky is a-live with tiny white birds into the moon's pale shadow
Leonardo lights a million tiny candles eyes ears tongue and heart
The sky is alive and smiling

II

Kestrel hovers over the hedges spotting her prey
She sees Leonardo playing a tin flute
Kestrel fans the wind to remain stationary
Leonardo plays a plaintive note
Kestrel kills without mercy in the true way of the wild
Leonardo tastes like stardust from the nebulae of Saturn

III

Leonardo is painting the ceiling of the sky
He paints a silver and gold rainbow
He paints a vulgar sunset
He paints with peacock feathers he paints with peeled garlic
He paints a mushroom cloud
He paints a destroying angel
He paints invisible mildew on the spores of a porous galaxy
Leonardo paints with a muzzle loading machine gun
He paints with a night stick
The sky explodes like a luminous puffball
Leonardo descends clapping

Paul Hindemith saw a need for recital repertoire for orchestral instruments and set out to write sonatas for each instrument. The Sonata for Horn is a fine example of Hindemith's Gebrauchs musik, or music composed for a special function. It requires great endurance and strength of both horn player and pianist. Hindemith also composed a concerto for French horn, written in 1949 for Dennis Brain.
