Film Screening: Who Killed the Electric Car?

7:30 p.m.

Don't miss this outdoor screening of the acclaimed documentary film that investigates the events leading to the quiet destruction of thousands of new, radically efficient electric vehicles. It will show consumers a different side of the history and development of electric cars one the auto companies won't tell you. Raising more questions than it answers, the film will leave you wondering: if GM could make 100% electric cars ten years ago, why aren't there any available for sale today? To show how efficient these vehicles are, the film projector will be powered by an electric car! Audience members will also be able to see examples of converted electric vehicles at the Piazza. The screening will be followed by an audience Q&A with the owners of the vehicles. Admission is free and open to the public. Sponsored by Pi Sigma Alpha and the Political Science Department.
