AMERICAN RED CROSS

Jan. 24, 1945
England

Dearest darling,

Today was a very eventful one, Jim came to see me. He got here early this morning, and left at five this afternoon. Sure was great seeing him. He looks dandy too. He looks heavier than he used to.

I see the reason now why you didn't want to send me that picture Maddie took of us last summer. It wasn't so very good was it sweetie? Jim had one of the prints with him.

We really talked a leg off one another. He's the same good natured Jim. I called Chuck, and we both got to talk to him. Sort of a reunion by phone.

Tell Maddy her better half looks sharp as a tack.

How's every thing with you these days little sweetheart? How I'd like to be with you, honey. We'd really do some fancy loving-mmm! What a tiger in the boudoir I'm going to be, Sweetie. We're really going to be busy catching up on our love making.

As we were recalling things this afternoon I happened to remember that Saturday nite when Jim came home a little pizozzled, and we took him for a ride in the roadster. Remember how we laughed about his book of economics?

They're playing, "Nutcracker Suite," on the radio. That's one set of records we'll get, when we get our phonograph combination. Huh Sweetie?

I suppose by this time you're back in our own place, darling. Bet it seems good to be there again, huh? You know the view I like best from our windows there is from the bedroom where you can see the river. Of course inside, the best view is you, darling.

Sure hope I catch some letters real soon.

Well, darling I guess I'm unwound so I'll wrap this up for now. All my love and millions of hugs and kisses,

Yours always,
Jack
