PROGRAM NOTES
A musical journey through the first two hundred years of opera in Italy

L’ORFEO (1607) ................................................................. Claudio Monteverdi
Act I Scenes 1-5—Nymphs, shepherds, and musicians arrive at the beautiful banks of the Lethe River and sing of nature, romance and love.
Act I Scene 6—Orfeo is seen in the shadows of the trees. Soon he arrives to join the others declaring his undying love for his exotic and faithful wife, Euridice. He is enraptured with her beauty and is truly happy that he has been blessed with such harmony of affection.
Act II—Orfeo, having lost his wife, Euridice, to the furies of hell, now laments her death in a poignant and dramatic moment. He exclaims his anguish to the earth and to the heavens that he no longer wishes to live. He vows to follow his beloved wife into the great abyss.

GRISELDA (1721) ................................................. Alessandro Scarlatti
Act II Aria: Mi rivedi—Gualtiero, King of Sicily, married a poor shepherdess named Griselda. The marriage was deeply unpopular with the king’s subjects. Faced with a rebellion from the Sicilian people the king was forced to renounce Griselda and to take a new wife. The rejected Griselda now returns to her country home and laments the loss of her husband and her exalted status.

FLAVIO CUNIBERTO (1688) .................................. Domenico Gabrielli
In the opera Flavio Cuniberto, Emilio sings to the god Amor, (Cupid), asking him will he grant him love? The cello solo/obbligato plays the role of Cupid in this charming and florid aria. "Will you give me hope and will your answer be ‘Yes or No’? Will the arrow of love be scornful to my lips or will love speak through my amorous eyes? Perhaps I will be serene? 'No or Yes?' In my heart I wish to be happy for the rest of my days!"

ORFEO ED EURIDICE (1762) ...................... Christoph Willibald Gluck
Act I Aria: Chiamo il mio ben cosi — A group of nymphs and shepherds gather in mourning around the tomb of Euridice. They leave as Orfeo enters. Orfeo mourns the loss of his wife. In grief he calls out her name and pleads to the gods to restore her to life.
Act II Finale and chorus: Pria di partir, o Dio! - Idomeneo, returning to Crete a victor in a war against the Trojans, encounters a great storm at sea. He vows to Neptune in return for seeing him safely home he promises to sacrifice the first person he sees upon his return to his Crete. Unfortunately, the first person he sees is his own son Idamante. In an effort to avoid sacrificing his own son, Idomeneo commands his son to escort Eletttra back to her home in Argos. Eletttra welcomes this opportunity to separate Idamante from his beloved Ilia in hopes that he will fall in love with her. Idamante and Eletttra bid farewell to Idomeneo and sing of the calm seas that await their journey.

Immediately, a sudden storm breaks out. The frightened townspeople are convinced that this is an expression of Neptune’s anger, and they ask who could be responsible for this. Neptune isespecially angered that the first person he sees is an innocent (Idamante). The crowd retreats in terror when a huge monster, which Neptune has summoned, comes up from the depths of the ocean. Neptune makes a deal with Idamante that he will spare his life if he can bring back the sea god’s daughter Idamante and sing of the calm seas that await their journey.

Act III Aria: May the pain and sorrow in my breast be ended by the sword! - Idomeneo’s music teacher, Ilia, despairs over her loss of Idamante and envisions his death in the storm. Idamante, however, is saved by the intervention of the Euminides (the three Greek furies). Idamante realizes that he is the son of Neptune and that his mother is Idamante. Idamante also discovers that he is related to Idamante’s mother, Idamante. Idamante, therefore, is able to return to Crete and to reunite with his family.

Act III Sextet: D’Oreste, d’Aiace - Don Curzio enters and declares to Count Almaviva that since Figaro cannot repay his loan to Marcellina, he is obligated to marry her. Figaro protests, saying that he needs the consent of his unknown noble parents. Figaro also makes mention of a birthmark on his right arm. Don Curzio allows that Marcellina is not her rival, but rather her mother-in-law. The plans of Count Almaviva and his lawyer have been foiled.
