"WITH THE COLORS"

Monday Night.

Hello, sweetheart of mine: -

Well, dear, it looks like a week or so before we'll get away - We have just finished study period and were told by our Captain that owing to so many men leaving, it would take at least that long to move us. We have to check in everything but what we wear, wait for transportation, take a physical exam so as to get a clean discharge and a dozen other things - Honey, it's sure some job to write - this gang are just hollering their heads off. Rather a disagreeable thing is happening right now here. Several of the fellows are short articles of clothing and other issued and personal articles. It looks like plain thievery in the company and our officers have just called a show down. We have all been held here in our study room, and one by one we will have to go to our barracks, empty everything we own, & have them' checked. It is rather disagreeable, but something had to be done about it, and it looks like the lost articles - or some of them that can be identified - will be recovered & the fellows are all taking it in the right spirit. Believe me, Leavenworth faces the man found tonight with anything in his possession that don't belong to him. In the meantime, the crowd is all here & raising a regular hell, singing & a little of everything.

Our work hasn't let up a minute, dear. Our Captain says we are to go on until the last minute, just as though nothing was happening. And I rather glad, too, for we are just beginning on some new work - gasses & gas masks & topography. We had two lectures today that were very interesting, honey girl, & as long as we do remain, I for one will be glad to keep busy. But, how my thoughts do continually revert to the moment when I'll strike home. It all listens too good to be true. Are you glad, baby girl?

Had a letter today from your dad,
dear - rather a surprise, too. If I have time I'll answer it.

Well, I expect to be called out
any minute now to turn my stuff inside out, so will call it off for tonight. Borrowed this paper here,
dear - notice the condition it is in?

Goodnight sweet girl.

With all my love,
Emo.
