Exploring Unusual Post-Graduate Careers in the Arts

Carli Hawkins with Dr. Jocelyn L. Buckner
Chapman University Theatre Department

Thesis: What am I proving?

In this thesis, I am discovering potential careers for college graduates related to the arts. These careers are unique and more unorthodox than the traditional performing arts occupations that are commonly thought of and competitively fought for. The purpose of this is to prove that there are many careers and options available to performing arts graduates, which will assist in making them successful in the field they love and studied in school. I also am aiding myself in preparing for graduation and laying out a variety of potential post-graduation jobs for myself.

Evidence: How is this proved?

I began by picking five careers that are related to this field but are more unique.

- Voice Acting
- Cruise Lines
- Disney Parks
- Youtube

•Performing on the West End in London

The next step included comparing the salaries and age ranges for each potential career, as well as considering what my current experience can assist me in obtaining. I also took into account location, ease and competition of each career, etc. in order to find which careers would be more beneficial for this point in my life and which would be easier to obtain later in life with more experience. (For example, the West End is a larger goal that requires more experience than a cruise line would necessarily require.)

- Voice Acting (More experience.)
- Cruise Lines (Less experience.)
- Disney Parks (Less experience.)
- Youtube (Less experience.)
- West End (More experience.)

Conclusion: Why is this important?

Finding a job after college is a daunting and challenging task, especially for students in such a competitive and often frustrating field as performing arts. This thesis can personally aid me greatly in finding careers after I graduate that are related to the field I'm interested in and I have devoted my life to. It will not only help me create a five year plan for myself, but it can also help other arts students discover potential careers for themselves for post-graduation.
