Darling Wife,

England. Mar. 17

Here it is Saturday again, and come to think of it, it's also St. Patrick's day. Well, anyway my fatigues are green.

I received your air mail letter of March 6th. today. Seems like they're coming thru' as fast as v mail now.

We've had some good music on the radio this evening. I still miss those swell Saturday evenings we used to spend together, sweetie. Well soon, maybe not tomorrow, but soon we'll be enjoying all those good things together again, darling.

You still play that record every once in a while, huh sweetie? I made that one Sunday evening down at Swamp Butner.

That's right honey, in about two weeks you'll have to have the new license for the car. Let me know what our new number is when you get it. Glad the car is running like a well oiled little peanut vendor again.

Darling, I miss every little thing about you. The cute little way your eyes crinkle up when you're asleep. your soft smooth cheeks, and how beautiful your eyes are to look into. Oh honey, how you're going to be loved when I get home. You're such a sweet, wonderful little wife. Before we were married I thought I loved you as much as it would ever be possible for one person to love another, but now I know that everyday all my life I'll love you more and more, and it's all your fault too, honey cause you are so sweet. I'm returning all your hugs and kisses plus millions more, and all my love.

Your Own,
Jack
