Scott Stone

While Scott Stone hasn’t been outside of this country very often, he has certainly made his way around America in his many musical endeavors. Having spent his early years in northern New England, Scott tagged along with his family to Maryland to begin his schooling. He began playing trumpet in the fourth grade and was perfectly content to let music be a hobby while he pursued a career as a veterinarian until he switched to the euphonium in the beginning of his sophomore year of high school. Scott quickly fell in love with the euphonium and decided to pursue its study in college at the University of Georgia – thus, continued the move across the country.

While at UGA Scott earned a Bachelor of Music (Euphonium Performance) and Bachelor of Music (Music Theory). In addition to his musical education, he was inculcated into a lover of all things UGA and now proudly “bleeds Red and Black.” When he reluctantly realized it was time to leave Georgia, Scott moved to northern Texas and completed a Master of Music (Euphonium Performance) and Master of Library Science at the University of North Texas. Finally, after deciding to leave the fancy free school life, Scott moved to Southern California to become the Music Librarian at Chapman University.

Throughout most of his schooling, Scott was a very active competitor in solo and chamber music competitions. Some of the competitions he won or placed at include the Leonard Falcone International Euphonium Competition, UGA Concerto Competition, International Tuba Euphonium Association Solo Competition, International Tuba Euphonium Quartet Competition, and the Music Teacher National Association Solo Brass Competition. His primary teachers include Dr. Brian Bowman, David Zerkel, Don Palmire, and Dr. Robert Birch.
