Dear Henri:

On my return from our trip abroad I find your letter, written shortly after our anniversary. Dear friend, I don't know what you are talking about. Everything you said and did at the party was in the best of taste -- as is everything you say and do. I am the one who should be contrite for not having written to thank you for making the party so joyously memorable. In fact, I keep getting further into you debt. By way of partial atonement, I want to send for you a set of the new Encyclopedia Britannica, which is a complete break from the traditional form -- unless, of course, you already have the set.

Affectionately,
