Dear Dr. Temianka:

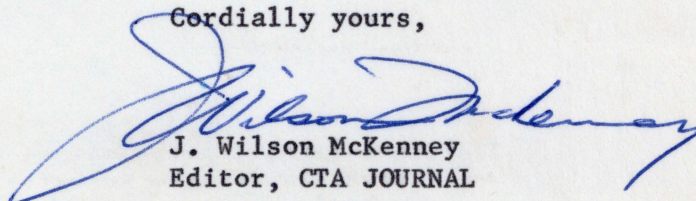

I am delighted with the pertinency and perception of the article bearing your name which appears in the current issue of Saturday Review. This is one of the most constructive and discerning articles I have seen on the creative society in California. I have been making a point of seeking out and studying everything I can find in current literature on the teaching of music, art and drama, especially in California.

You will note from the enclosed outline that a theme of "Music, Art, and Drama" we expect to use for the January issue of the CTA Journal. I hope to get a series of articles which will contribute to our thinking about the conflict of values in our time which might be expressed through a discussion of these three subjects.

I would like to obtain permission to reprint your article, but I have tried to hold to a policy of not picking up from other publications unless absolutely necessary.

Would it be possible for you to write for us approximately 1200 words to reach my desk sometime early in November, dealing with one aspect of the discussion in my outline? I do not wish to suggest a specific assignment for you until I get an expression of your interest. We are able to pay a small honorarium. I should very much appreciate hearing from you at your convenience.

Cordially yours,

J. Wilson McKenney
Editor, CTA JOURNAL
