My dear Yehudi:

My telephone call to you yesterday was intended strictly as an affectionate birthday greeting, without any thought of practical matters. Since our conversation I have given further thought to the matter and as we like to say, "la nuit porte conseil". Having slept on it I sent you just now the following telegram which I trust you have received promptly:

"Understand your financial concern. Shall assume all expenses for American portion of travel. As time is short propose you instruct Columbia send me immediately two open round trip business class tickets New York London. This will hopefully leave a fee of two to three thousand dollars in your budget for the Master Class which would cover my expenses in London. Please confirm. Warm greetings.

I recall that Mary Pelosi from the New York Columbia office called us here in Los Angeles some time ago, and therefore assume that you will be giving her the necessary instructions. If she will immediately send me the open tickets, this leaves me the freedom to select whichever flight number and company will be most convenient for me, and my secretary here can take care of all these minute details, without involving Ms. Pelosi.

I plan to take a plane out of New York Monday morning May 12 at 10:00 am, arriving in London at the civilized hour of 9:00 pm that same day. You will of course be informed as soon as these details have been finalized.

I trust that all problems are herewith solved. Emmy and I look forward with great pleasure to seeing you and Diana again, and to our return to London.

Yours ever,

Henri Temianka
