Cruel Amaryllis, who with your name to love, alas, bitterly you teach. Amaryllis, more than the white privet pure, and more beautiful, but deafer than the asp, and fiercer and more elusive. Since telling I offended you, I shall die in silence. – G. Guarini

Whoever wants to have a happy and joyful heart, shouldn't follow cruel love, that

Mad is he who believes that I would leave my beloved, be it for amorous flattery or for proud, contemptuous threats. Change your mind you who hope that my heart enjoys liberty. My heart is prisoner. Say what you will. Say what you may. Others, out of jealousy, trap that has caught me. Say what you will. Say what you may. - Pio di Savoia

A Special Note of Thanks: The inspiration for this evening’s program comes from a seminar I took back in 2000 during my doctoral studies at USC,

Professor Giulio Maria Ongero, our new Dean of the College of Performing Arts.

Program Notes

The turn of the seventeenth century was one of those watershed moments in music history. Advances in music forms (both instrumental and vocal), and new developments in musical instruments and the techniques for playing them (including the notation of figured bass), all contributed to this revolution. Nowhere was this more evident than in Northern Italy, and, as is predictably the case, anytime there is radical change, there is someone making the argument for conservative resistance. Enter Giovanni Maria Artusi.

The Bolognese cleric and music theorist was the principal dissenting voice against the “license” taken by these young radical composers. In a pair of polemics, dated 1600 and 1603, Artusi lashed out against the new fad of using unprepared dissonance and unequal voices, arguing that it violated all the established rules of counter-point. (Which, of course, it did!) He held up as models the work of established composers like Giovanni Gabrieli, Josquin des Prés, Cristóbal de Morales, and Adrian Willaert. He also felt the need to defend the work of his traditionalist mentor, Gioseffo Zarlino against the attacks of the rebellious fellow Zarlino protégé, Vincenzo Galilei (father of the famous astronomer, Galileo.)

In his argument, Artusi cited specific examples of these “crudities” from an unidentified work by an unidentified composer. Ironically, the public would later learn that the piece was “Cruda Amarilli” by Claudio Monteverdi.

In 1605, Monteverdi published his Fifth Book of Madrigals (conspicuously placing the offending “Cruda Amarilli” first in the set) the preface to which offered an explanation that contemporary musical practice had bifurcated into two camps: prima pratica being consistent with Artusi’s ideal of the flowing counterpoint, prepared dissonance, and equality of voices; and seconda pratica being a new dramatic style of monody and recitative, that emphasized melody and bass, and brought with it the beginnings of functional harmony.

Rhetorically, Artusi’s argument was sound, but he may as well have been arguing the merits of holding back the tide. The new “Baroque” style was

As a hopeless heart feeds on pain, turning happy days into grief and torment, so, devoid of hope, do I feed and live on grief. While, sweetheart, it displeases you not to help me, you well know that arrows and fire were always fun and games to me. But now, I must say, I cannot remain in the flames and not perish. - O. Why, if you hated me, did you feign love only to deceive me? Alas, my star, you made yourself so beautiful, so wild, so proud, so as to wound my spirit. I adored you. You scorned me, unkind Phyllis, why? Who knows if, some day, lofty pride may not long for what it now disdains. Alas, I would tell my heart to flee, to destroy that faithless beauty. Ohimè, ch'io cado, SV 316 Monteverdi from C. Milanuzzi's Quarto scherzo delle ariose vaghezze (Venice, 1624)

Alas for me, I tumble down, alas for me, my foot slips again just as it did before and my lost and withering hope must I once again water with fresh tears.
This old passion I again feel in my heart, now that a beautiful face has broken, as well as the loved glances the hard enamel of these icy thoughts with which I, the unfortunate, have armed myself.
I was fool enough to think I should have a sure shield against the naked archer and yet I who am so warrior-like, what a coward I am. I will not endure the enticing blow of a single glance.
O immortal champion, I am angry and so weak. You are fleeing; like an enchanted man who has lost his way in glass armor, you have led me disloyal one against a sword made of hard diamond.
How powerfully punishes tyrannous love the daring of a rebellious soul. A kind word, a serene face, a charming wonderment can tie again a liberated heart.
Eyes, beauteous eyes if for you virtue has always been fair, and mercy true, oh, do not deny me the glance and the laughter; so that my prison on such beautiful ground should become a paradise. - Anonymous
