Dearest Henri:

Where are you?

I spent the afternoon in the attic on the floor by my trunk reading all of your letters. Such a delightful afternoon it was, too. I became very agitated thinking about present conditions in Europe and you there in the midst of things, I decided that you must come to this country immediately.
That is not a request, — please consider it as a command.

II.

I shall be expecting you so I shall not write more until I hear from you.

The Belgian address seemed the most likely to reach you, so until I hear from you and have some definite address, please regard me as your much concerned, faithful, ever affectionate, always devoted,

Lois
