Due to the exact date of the letter being unknown an estimated date has been provided.

I have become increasingly convinced that joy is civilized man's privilege;
that perception is a demonstration of his sensitivity;
that laughter is the proof of his reason;
that irreverence is the confession of his freedom;
that design is but a blueprint of his need for a faith;
that tears are an indication of his pity;
that social indignation is the release of what is best in his spirit;
and that tragic ecstasy finds him for once sharing in the sublime.
