Giacomo Puccini and Giovacchino Forzano’s operatic masterpieces Suor Angelica and Gianni Schicchi were composed in 1917. Forzano had originally conceived the drama Suor Angelica as a play but when he offered it to Puccini for his projected ‘triptich’ Il trittico, the composer accepted without hesitation. Gianni Schicchi was inspired by a brief passage from Canto 30 in Dante’s Divine Comedy. Reference to an obscure event in the social history of Dante’s Florence often serves as an introduction to this brilliant comedy. The true source of the libretto is the Commentary on the Divine Comedy by an anonymous Florentine of the 14th Century, a work that first appeared in print in 1866. There is some disagreement among music historians as to whether Puccini or Forzano first had the idea of basing the opera on this brief passage concerning a clever rascal who cheated Dante’s own relatives through marriage out of a substantial inheritance. Forzano submitted his outline to Puccini in March 1917 and completed the libretto in June. Puccini began work on it immediately, but completed it only after finishing Suor Angelica, the second part of Il trittico. The World premiere of Il trittico (Il tabarro, Suor Angelica and Gianni Schicchi) was at the Metropolitan Opera House on December 14, 1918.
The wealthy Buoso Donati has just died at his home in Florence. His relatives arrive for a visit and discover the deceased patriarch. Exaggerated mourning ensues but soon turns to reality: they all expect to be amply consoled with an inheritance. Betto of Signa has heard strange rumors according to which Buoso has left all his possessions to the Friars and the Charitable Works of Santa Reparata. Suspicious and greedy, the relatives begin frantically looking for the will. When it is found and opened their worst fears become reality. The false grief for the loss of their dear one turns into an authentic lament for the loss of their inheritance. Young Rinuccio is particularly upset. An inheritance would have secured permission to marry a girl without a dowry, Lauretta, daughter of the commoner Gianni Schicchi. Frustration prompts everyone to turn to the elder Simone for advice. Rinuccio interrupts suggesting Gianni Schicchi's well-known shrewdness could easily solve their problem. The others sternly reject the suggestion as the Donati family is above dealing with a commoner. At that moment Gianni arrives accompanied by his daughter. He quickly assesses the situation and after inspecting the will devises his plan. The proceedings are interrupted by Dr. Spinelloccio, unaware of the death of his patient. Gianni springs into action hiding in the bed of the deceased and imitating Buoso's voice he sends the doctor away, claiming that he feels better and wants to rest. Gianni's plan is now put into practice: dressed as Buoso, he lies on his bed and summons the notary Amantio and two witnesses, in front of whom he dictates a new will. He distributes the cash and some properties evenly among the relatives, but the most valuable assets, the house in Florence, the mills in Signa and the prized mule, he keeps for himself. The relatives can do nothing without revealing the fraud, for which the penalty is cutting-off a hand and exile from Florence. Meanwhile Rinuccio and Lauretta embrace, content in the knowledge that they will soon be married.
SUOR ANGELICA

The story is set in a convent, towards the end of the 1600's; where Sister Angelica took her vows seven years earlier, after being banished from her family for having given birth to an illegitimate son. The sisters are at chapel for evening prayers; two lay sisters are late, and also Sister Angelica, who does an act of penance before entering the church. After prayers and before recreation, Sister Zelatrice hands out punishments: to the two lay sisters who didn't make the act of penance as they were late, to Sister Lucilla who laughed in church and to Sister Osmina who had two roses hidden in her sleeves. Now the sisters approach the fountain and observe with joy, almost as though it were a miracle, the sunlight that lights up the water, an event that happens only three times a year. They decide to take a bucket of the golden water to the tomb of Sister Bianca Rosa, who would certainly desire it; they, on the other hand, aren't allowed to have desires. But Sister Genovieffa confesses candidly that she'd still love to hold a small lamb in her arms, while Sister Dolcina can't resist culinary delights. And Sister Angelica? She denies that she has any desires, but the other sisters aren't convinced and mutter that their companion has a great desire to see her noble relatives again, whom she hasn't seen or heard from since entering the convent. Their chatting is suddenly interrupted by the arrival of Sister Nurse, who asks Sister Angelica to prepare a remedy for Sister Chiara, who has been stung by wasps. Sister Angelica mixes a cure from among the plants she tends and gives it to the nurse, while two sisters collect a cart of food. As they distribute the food, one sister asks if there's someone in the parlor as they noticed a rich carriage outside the convent door. Sister Angelica becomes tense: she passionately wishes that the visit is for her. At that moment the Mother Superior appears and calls her to the parlor: her aunt, the Princess, wishes to speak with her. Sister Angelica approaches her aunt, who, with an air of icy indifference, informs her that Angelica's younger sister, Anna Viola, is soon to marry and so she has come to have her to sign a document concerning the partition of the family fortune. "Who is my sister going to marry," asks Sister Angelica? She will marry a person who, through love for her sister has forgiven the great fault with which Angelica has stained the family honor. Sister Angelica momentarily rebels against the severity of her aunt, then reaffirms her will to expiate her sins, but expresses one desire: she wants to hear about her son, whom she only saw at the moment of his birth and since then she hasn't heard anything about him for seven long years. After a few moments of silence, the Princess tells her that her child died two years earlier. Sister Angelica signs the document and immobilized by grief, remains alone, crying out for her son whom she'll never hold in her arms. The other sisters return from the garden and leave for their cells for the night. Sister Angelica returns from her cell and starts collecting flowers. She uses them to prepare a poisonous potion; bidding the sisters a tender farewell she drinks the poison, and is immediately overcome by guilt at having committed mortal sin. She prays frantically for salvation; the doors of the chapel open and the space is flooded with light. Sister Angelica, in her delusion, is convinced the Virgin Mary has come to reunite her child with a dying mother.
